Very Enthusiastic Hockey Meeting

Gleichen Hopes to Form a League with Nearby Towns

Big Hockey Dance Dec. 1st

A very enthusiastic meeting of the Gleichen Hockey Club was held on Thursday last, and organization of the club for the coming season was successfully accomplished. Matters relating to the formation of a league either in the town or districts were discussed, also ideas regarding uniforms were taken up and discussed. The management of the rink being in attendance, the club were informed that every night from six to eight o'clock the rink would be set aside for the purpose of hockey practice, thus assuring every member of the club plenty of opportunity for working out. Election of officers for the season resulted in L. M. Webster being elected as president, Frank Scott as manager, and V. L. Gamble as secretary-treasurer. The club will meet this season to put up a real brand of hockey, but in order to do so they will need the support of every hockey fan and all who are interested in hockey throughout the district. Everyone in Gleichen and the district is invited to become a member of the club and help us to hasten to make the season a great success and one long to be remembered. The club are giving a dance in the Gleichen Opera House on Wednesday, November 1st, for the purpose of raising funds for uniforms and other equipment. Everyone, whether or not a hockey lover, is cordially invited to attend this dance, which we can assure you will be the best of the season. Made by Mrs. Trainor's orchestra. Everyone welcome.

Don't miss the Girls' concert this evening—Wednesday

Full announcement will be made next week about the Girls' class of work on Saturday, Dec. 4th. The meeting this week on Thursday at 8:30 p.m. led Mrs. Farquharson's house.

Subject for Sunday night, "Why the Brazilian we choose king". A message from an ancient day for our own times. A corollary invitation extended to all who are a stranger in town don't remain a stranger. Come along to the Union Church. Your presence will help us and give us a chance to get acquainted with you.

The Chinese class started last Sunday afternoon promises to be successful. We have a population of about twenty Chinese engaged in the laundry and restaurant business. If we ever much our opinions may vary with respect to the Chinese as a citizen we are compelled to admit that to leave him in ignorance of our language and institutions is a bad policy from every angle. In the larger places the ambitious among them may take advantage of night schools. In smaller towns there are no such opportunities. As a matter of fact the Chinese population in Canada grows more to the border school for whatever training they have received than to any other institution. They are eager for instruction and

Arrowood News

James Shultz, after having spent the past year with his uncle, P. M. Norton, has returned to his home in Oklahoma. As the weather has been ideal for about hauling the trails have been conspicuously dotted with long trains of the golden grain. Thanks to the Government, the grade is in fine shape and the only lack we have coming now is the price of wheat. The Arrowood Literary Society will open up the season December 3rd with a "kid party," to be held at its regular meeting place. A short program and election of officers for the ensuing year will be followed by a "big" good time by the "kids." Prizes will be given to the most "kidishly" dressed person. Everybody is most cordially invited, both old and young.

Alberta Coal Production

Alberta's coal production for 1920 will be fairly per cent, in excess of last year's. It is now estimated by the government mines branch, A total output of well over 6,500,000 tons is expected by the end of the year, as compared with 6,022,212 tons in 1919. There has already been mined for the nine months of this year, to the end of September, a total of 4,250,661 tons, the output for September alone being 618,000 tons.

With the busiest months approaching and the development of a market stretching from the Pacific Coast as far east as the Great Lakes, it is fully expected that the industry will keep showing a steady increase. There is no doubt that when Alberta's coal resources are fully worked the present output will be but a fraction of one annual production.

To date not more than 55,000,000 tons have been mined, all told. Try to realize that the available supply of coal in Alberta is estimated at 1,187,271 million tons. It will be seen that the present production is merely a drop in the bucket. Add to this the fact that the coal surface is spread over an area of 30,000 square miles. With a steady demand from all parts of the world for coal, the coal industry of the province is bound to increase by leaps and bounds until it is one of the biggest industries not only of the province, but of the Dominion.

Great Entertainer New Programme

Arrangements have been completed for the appearance of Leslie Cross, the famous English entertainer and musician, who will give his unique entertainment on Monday, December 6th, at the Gleichen Opera House.

It is only on rare occasions we are visited by artists of the calibre of Mr. Leslie Cross and it is to be hoped all will keep the date as clear as possible from conflicting engagements and give him a reception worthy of our people.

The nature of the entertainment offered is difficult to describe, as he is an artist of great versatility, appearing as a humorist, actor, pianist and composer. The name of Leslie Cross is well known throughout the world and few names are better known in the English speaking world. A cordial reception should await him. Select dance to follow; no extra charge.

The hockey boys are getting anxious that old Sel and the chinook winds will let up long enough to allow a little ice to form.

Several acts have to be left over until next week, having arrived too late. We can't do all our work on Wednesday so please send yours in early.

Pull Bros. Coming Friday, Nov. 26

There are more things in heaven and on earth than there are dreamt of in the philosophy, Horatio, and after witnessing a performance of the Pull Bros., most baffling entertainment of all times, one is compelled to exclaim, "Will wonders ever cease?" The Pull Bros. entertainment is unlike the entertainment of the ordinary kind. Everything is novel from beginning to end and embraces much that is weird, incomprehensible and marvellous to behold. Their entire entertainment is presented independent of the usual stage artifices, and yet in their magical illusion and marvelous escape performance, they are all problems in which they make you believe you are seeing things you do not, and keep you from seeing things you should not.

The mysteries and wonders of telepathy and spiritualism which Prof. Theo. Pull has spent years investigating, are brought home to each audience which witnesses his entertainment in exploitation by him of many of the most subtle discoveries and innovations.

The Pull Bros. and their tremendous mystery production will play at Gleichen November 26th. Prices $1 and $1.

Socials, concerts, movies, educational classes, debating club, gymnastics, swimming team, reading room, information bureau. These and many other attractions are at the disposal of the prairie victors to the coast this winter, and can all be enjoyed at the Vancouver Y.M.C.A., which is preparing its programme this year having the young farmers from the prairies particularly in mind. In fact, a course of study in agriculture has been prepared, the lectures in which will be given by leading agricultural professors and other authorities. This will give the young farmers a chance to spend a few hours each week to great advantage. The lobby and the social gatherings afford a fine chance for the visitors to make new friends and meet old ones, while the "grape" is perhaps more than any other the place where "good fellows get together."

PROMINENT WESTERN CHARACTERS—SOME INTERESTING ANECDOTES OF PEOPLE WE ALL KNOW

BRIGADIER GENERAL ARTHUR CURRIE

One summer's night in August, 1914, in the city of Victoria the writer, in a very humble capacity, was engaged in military duties at the exhibition grounds, where a large number of hastily mobilized soldiers were encamped.

The camp was in command of Colonel Arthur Currie, who at that time was the commanding officer of a local regiment of Gordon Highlanders. He was handing over his command the following day to another officer and was to proceed to Valcartier to take the position of Brigadier General. The sudden presence of war was depressing men's minds. The peaceful routine of business and pleasure which had prevailed so long had given way to eminent danger. The future was full of dark possibilities and the manhood of the country was asking to be called.

In Victoria it was known that there were German warships at the coast. Men of Teutonic blood who had been prominent in social and business circles were a little more than suspected of being spies; and there was a note of excitement and unrest. During the course of the afternoon the authorities had learned that one or more persons of German nationality had obtained access to the camp and a patrol to whom ball cartridges had been served out was formed to keep an all night watch.

As darkness fell and the bugles sounded "lights out" and the bustle of the encampment died away Colonel Currie came out and sat on a chair on a little upstairs verandah outside the officers' quarters. He sat there all alone incessantly smoking a short pipe and watching the light fade above the snow peaks of the Olympians.

It was the duty of the writer to pass that place several times during the night and the big bulk of that motionless figure was always there betrayed occasionally by the all glow of the pipe, or when the face gleamed like an impression from Rembrandt in the sudden glow of a match, in the cupped hands.

He sat out the dawn, nor did he stir when the chill morning wind from the straits whirled through the sleeping city. He remained there the personification of vigilance and thought. I wonder if, during that long night, he visited the career that was before him; the work of organization and valor; the dreadful days of the first years in France; the loss by heroic death of those who had been his comrades; the nights of watching; the days of deadly eminent danger and the winning of the Victoria Cross; the battle and the honor of knighthood bestowed on him by his sovereign at the close of a hard fought day.

The career of Colonel Currie reads like a chapter from the old romantic chronicles of Froissart and it is like an echo from Agincourt or Crecy.

He was always fond of soldiering. As a lad he was a bugler and went steadily through every rank until he commanded a regiment. In private life he was engaged in real estate, brokerage and insurance in the city of Victoria, but his heart was in soldiering and he devoted most of his attention to it. He was in command of the fifth regiment of Garrison artillery for some years and during that time he retained the status of being the most efficient in the Canadian militia. Later a crack regiment of the Gordon Highlanders was raised in Victoria and Colonel Currie was given the command of it.

He is a very splendid figure of a man; something over six feet in height, with a portly men and broad in proportion, and when dressed in the regiments of the Highlanders he was a martial and imposing figure. When Valcartier camp was constituted he was one of the first men to be chosen by the minister of militia as a Brigadier General. On the fields of France and Flanders he soon proved his worth and his mettle and the features which bred him, and the time came when he was the only logical man to command the Canadian army in the field. His work in that capacity has been told within the records of the war and his name will be one to conjure with as long as there is a survivor in Canada who fought in France and Belgium.

At the conclusion of the war he came home to Canada where he was accorded a reception as remarkable as any ever to a popular hero. He was given a high military appointment but he resigned it to become president of McGill University. Last week he was in Western Canada in connection with his university work and met many an old comrade who had been with him in France, in the dark days of 1915-1916.

He is bringing to bear in his work at Canada's greatest university the same executive gifts and the same pleasant but compelling personality which won him loyalty on the field of battle. He is one of Canada's best and noblest men and his coming to the strong splendid stock which after carving Ontario out of the primeval forest, spread its sons over the western country where they took strong and vigorous root. He appeals to Canadians on account of his personal qualities and patriotic qualities and most of all because he is one of ourselves.

He is still in the very prime of his days and there should be as great a career before him in the paths of peace as he achieved on the blood-stained battlefields of Europe.

The Joy of Being

By John Kendrick Bangs

Whether my road is leading me
Perhaps I do not know;
But, oh, the path is fair to see,
And sweet the while I tread it,
In sun or storm, by day or night,
If skies are lowering or bright,
The highway holds so much delight

I run with heart and glow.

Lanes may thorny be, and Lead
To steep heart-breaking heights;
The foresta wild with bush and weed

My strength may mortify;
Yet, with resolve to do and dare,
I hold within my soul the heart of
For hazards beyond or pathways where

The goals worth winning lie.

It is enough to live and plan,
To joy in birth and cease;
To do what things a mortal can
With spirit blithe and free;
To meet and overcome the ill,
And in the end to gain the thrill
Of manifold mastery!

CURRENT COMMENT

ON MATTERS OF PUBLIC INTEREST TO DWELLERS IN THE PRAIRIE PROVINCES OF CANADA

A SERIES OF ARTICLES DEALING WITH VARIOUS WESTERN QUESTIONS

ECONOMISTS ON CANADA'S TRADE

American economic writers are at present developing considerable interest not only in the trade relations between Canada and the United States but to the possibilities of Canada's economic and commercial expansion.

It is being borne in upon that despite the vast natural resources of their own country they have become dependent upon Canada for certain manufactured essentials. One writer points out that instead of receiving from us only raw materials Canada is now exporting to the States large quantities of manufactured materials. One article in a well known publication says:

In former years what took from Canada was for the most part natural products—oil, fish, lumber, furs, minerals, and agricultural produce; and we sold in return manufactures and such goods for consumption as her rigorous climate didn't permit her to grow. In some measure our trade still shows this character, but the difference is of degree. More and more she is sending us, for example, leather in place of hides and skins, paper and pulp in place of the wood from which they are made, and with the aid of American capital and enterprise she is using her enormous water power to prepare for consumption of many of the natural products which she once sold as raw material. It is similarly significant that the value of the raw cotton we send is very much greater than the value of the finished cotton she takes, that she now makes more than 90 per cent. of all the boots and shoes her people need instead of buying them from us and that among the most important of our exports to her are such natural products as coal and oil for her growing industries."

Development in Canada has not marched equally with that in the United States. There were many natural difficulties to be overcome before the wide and fertile spaces of the west could be settled. Our climate is rigorous, the country was vast, and we are only now coming to a realization of our possibilities.

Some months after the signing of the Armistice, a writer in the Saturday Evening Post, of Philadelphia, named George Pattullo, invited a storm of criticism from Canadians by writing an article which pandered to the spread eagle sentiment of the Americans. In it he sought to prove that the United States had been the deciding factor in winning the war. It was neither a credit to its author nor to the magazine which published it.

Since that time Mr. Pattullo has apparently experienced a change of heart.

In a recent issue of the same publication he has an article entitled "Watch Dogs of the World" which deals in an appreciation of the British's extraordinary importance in the scheme of civilization.

After enumerating some of the external and internal difficulties which the Grand Old Empire is at present experiencing he says:

"Perhaps the most remarkable feature of national sentiment today in Canada is a growing outburst of Canadianism in our country. The writer above quoted appears to have the real appreciation of Canadian sentiment when he says:

"Of even greater influence in shaping our commercial policy is the sound consideration, which consists in the will of her people that Canada shall be economically as well as politically independent; a well-rounded, self-conscious, self-reliant nationhood is the aim of all political parties in the Dominion."

"Yes, in my opinion the old lion would stand a deal of advantage. These British have been weathering storms for a thousand years and who knows but that they would be inclined to waver a shilling against their chances of winning through. Should they lack, the vast structure built up by centuries of patient toil, far-sighted diplomacy and prodigious outpouring of treasure will bring down in its crash the whole structure of the British Empire. Great Britain is the keystone of it. What that might mean to America is worth sitting up nights to think over."

"Confidence in the outcome is inspired by their amazing recovery from the death grapple with Germany. It is one of the stupendous achievements of history."

"Knowing well what the effort had cost them, their sacrifices and losses in men and money, and with full appreciation of the demerit military demands had necessitated in the industrial machine, I was prepared to find a British demand for peace, groping its way back to normal. Instead I found a country pulsing with vigor, whose tides of life appeared to be flowing with all the irresistible strength of yore."

On The Wrong Line
Telephone girls sometimes glory in their mistakes if there is a joke in consequence. The story is told by a telephone operator in one of our town exchanges about a man who asked her for the number of a local theatre.
He got the wrong number, and without asking to whom he was talking, he said: "Can I get a box for two tonight?"

A startled voice answered him from the other end of the line: "We don't have boxes for two."

"Isn't this—the theatre?" he called out.

"Why no," was the answer,
"this is an undertaker's."

Immense Quantities Of Gasoline Lost By Evaporation Yearly

While experts have for a long time been studying methods of conserving supplies of oil and coal, especially the latter, it has been found that there has been an enormous waste, hitherto undiscovered, of oil and coal in the United States. In a report sent to the United States Bureau of Mines by a specialist, it was stated that close on $27,000,000 worth of oil and coal is lost each year in the oil field alone, through evaporation, in the form of gasoline. The report says, supplies more than half of the oil produced in the United States. The few oil wells in which crude oil is stored before being sent to the market cause an aggregate loss of 122,000,000 gallons of gasoline per year. This has a value, at twenty-two cents per gallon, of $26,840,000, representing about three per cent. of the total gasoline in the United States.

The report, a series of tests in the different tanks in which the oil is stored, including a loss of 10 per cent. of the oil stored in other tanks of different kinds. The problem of gasoline evaporation, providing these losses are now being taken up by the Government, and the bureau of mines and at one of the large experimental stations. It was stated in a report that two-thirds to two-fifths of the loss could be saved by effective protection of the tanks from the atmosphere. The experts of the bureau are now engaged on the problem, but their conclusions may not be reached for a long time.

HOME-MADE BREAD WOULD BRING DOWN FLOOD

Board of trade reporters from Winnipeg that yesterday's drop in the price of wheat was followed by a reduction of one cent a bushel in the price of flour. Chicago bakers the announcement that no drop is anticipated here.

L. L. Winters, of Hubbard, Warren and Chandler, a board of trade member, said that the farmers would make their own bread. "If housewives would make their own bread, the price of flour would be reduced. Home cooking also will help the farmer by stimulating the demand for wheat."

They were the white man's appreciation of the black man's appreciation of anything he possesses is measured by the price he pays, "paraphrasing the young Indian, "So me tomorrow."

On Stone Child's return home his mother lost no time in using words.

"What speaks the Sparrow Hawk?" she queried.

"The Bow asks for an alliance with the Bird."

"What asks the Bird?" she asked and looked to her daughter.

"The Hawk," was the deciding rejoinder.

ly disclaimed any thought or intention of so doing, and incidentally it may be said that he adhered to this decision, being known among her people in later years as "Stone Child's mother."

A Father's Charge

To his son, Stone Child, Esau-Koo-Chase spoke, at greater length.

"My son, I am leaving you, my place must be taken by you. So long as your mother needs care and protection, you must be her home. But I lay upon you a solemn duty. You must never be a father to the little sister who has grown up and played with you. You must keep her, as you would guard and keep your own child. I have said it."

New Responsibilities

The spirit of Esau-Koo-Chase slipped away to the Happy Hunting grounds, his body disappeared beneath the soil, and the young lad, Stone Child, took upon his shoulders the duties assigned him by his father.

The little sister, "Pea-Hew" (Prairie Chicken), had grown up happy, healthy, hopeful, and was now a woman. She was now a wife, and therefore her husband was now a father. Several of the young braves, had at different times sounded him by custom, but he had not been successful in concealing his "brother-in-law," but without meeting the response that would lead to encouragement.

The Prairie Chicken

Amiable, athletic and like her namesake, prairie chicken, alert, she had her own thoughts on the matter. She had not been successful in concealing her girl friends and relatives that young Buffalo Bow was her ideal of all that was brave and manly and good.

A Young Indian

Buffalo Bow was an orphan boy who years before, had been left by his dying father, "Many Horses," in charge of his mother. She was now a widow, and she had frequently urged his nephew to choose a new wife.

result that in time he confided to his uncle that nothing would induce him to marry, and he had home as his mate the little Prairie Chicken living on the adjoining Quanaqua reserve.

chieftain's plan to look over the situation and decide if whether his nephew's choice would be a suitable granddaughter to his own daughter, "The Man-Who-Walks-All-Fours," and if so, he must then confer with Stone Child concerning the terms of the alliance.

An Invitation

On the following day Stone Child received a message asking him to visit the chief's wigwam.

Long they sat in customary silence, and many pipes were smoked before Pea-Hew-Kee-Sie, attending his hand to young Stone Child spoke cautiously.

"A youth of the Sparrow Hawk is a people who would be a maiden of the Wild Rose band."

"You are a young man, and you are your brother-in-law. What asks the maiden's brother?"

"His horses don't die in the night. He is equally cautious, ready to face with the real issue. 'How many' was the young man's thoughts. 'How few?' was the thought of the chief."

Again the pipes were lighted and silence reigned. Hate would be seemingly.

"We are learning the white man's ways," resumed the chief. "The Pale Face has been here."

When the white man's appreciation of anything he possesses is measured by the price he pays, "paraphrasing the young Indian, "So me tomorrow."

On Stone Child's return home his mother lost no time in using words.

A White Pony

"The son of Esau-Koo-Chase must not be first to change the customs of our people. His daughter, Pea-Hew, wed your people, who will present me with his horse. It is not symbol of her innocence and purity one of these must be a snow white filly."

"What concentrated joy or love!"

"In blast or blighted love!"

In the years that followed Buffalo Bow and Pea-Hew lived happily together. Among their own people their home was a model. Among the whites their attachment to each other was always a matter of common observation. No child was born to them.

A Quarrel

Five years passed. On a keen cold morning in January Buffalo Bow rode out to locate his band of horses wintering on the prairie some miles away. Early in the afternoon a storm broke. Soon a blizzard was born to them with great difficulty he fought his way home against a bitter, biting wind. Cold and wet, he entered his home and his abode. A bright warm fire was burning in the open chimney. Pea-Hew was absent. This displeased him in his half-frozen state, and that when his wife came in shortly, no word escaped his lips. She glanced at his angry face and his cold hands and feet, and she had gone into the adjoining house to visit her young cousin.

Buffalo Bow was not to be appeased and retorted "Is home to be forsaken for stormy weather of ally men?" After the morning season does the prairie leave the snow to gambol in the hills?" He took his supper in silence, and as the evening hours passed his friends in the tent came in. During their talk he said to his wife, "Pea-Hew slipped out unnoticed."

"If the love of the heart is blighted," he said again, "If that sweet song is forgotten, I will be learned no more."

At a late hour Buffalo Bow's friends went home. Pea-Hew had not returned. He had come to some decision. He had said his words. He waited until after midnight, then concluded that his wife was still in the house of her uncle's home and would return in the morning.

A Great Trouble

Morning dawned, the wind beat against the storm door, but the sun's rays seemed to find a difficulty in penetrating the thick clouds. Buffalo Bow was at the Agency office interpreter Shafie had started a fire, now roaring in the hearth, but the Agency clerk entered to take up the matter with the day.

"I see Chief Pea-Hew-Kee-Sie crossing the lake yonder," he remarked to Shafie, "and he is early for a cold morning, and what is unusual for him, he is walking, and all at once he is in the Agency entered. Evidences of some great trouble were in his eyes. He was scantily clothed, his hair hung loose over his back, no hat, and he was looking at the man an hour he sat in silent meditation. Good form required that he should be in the Agency. Finally the clerk addressed him, 'Let us hear it!'"

"Mutchee kee?" he began, "something terrible has happened. Great darkness is over my people this morning. My niece left home last night while some of my young friends talked and smoked with my nephew. At daylight my son, going early to the stable, found her body cold and hanging from a tree, a piece of, rawhide around her neck."

Pea-Hew had taken her own life. At the inquest held by the doctor, he was asked, "Why tears rolling over his cheeks and of his happy married life and that of his wife, who had been spoken an unkind word."

"Often will thoughts look back and weep over every affection of the heart, and the heart of a pleasant song."

"Will be the first note of the heart, a full spirit."

"Mourning in Zollian strains, 'O'er the dream, of the heart' 'When the hot Siroc wind came, 'Hath withered its own oars'."

Buffalo Bow aged rapidly. His heart was a broken, and he was spoiled. He never married again. He was the young Indian, "So me tomorrow."

On Stone Child's return home his mother lost no time in using words.

"What speaks the Sparrow Hawk?" she queried.

"The Bow asks for an alliance with the Bird."

"What asks the Bird?" she asked and looked to her daughter.

"The Hawk," was the deciding rejoinder.

On the morning the Chief entered the Sparrow Hawk's tent, and he was there. Pea-Hew's brother broke the silence.

"No, madam," said the tramp, "I will say, but it's against my principles to say 'no' to a tramp."

"Well," said the farmer's wife, "there will be some coal here this afternoon, and—"

"No, madam," said the tramp, "I will say, but it's against my principles to say 'no' to a tramp."

"Well," said the farmer's wife, "there will be some coal here this afternoon, and—"

An Extraordinary Entertainment on Friday, Nov. 26

The Pull Bros, most baffling entertainers of all times, who for a quarter of a century have mystified and baffled four continents, are coming to our play house, Gleichen, November 26th, and will set before our theatre-goers a glittering array of illusions, magic, telepathy, spiritualism, hypnotism and marvellous escapes. There is nothing supernatural about the work of the Pull Bros. They are not magicians and do not account for everything they do upon natural laws, and the feat or whatever they may be called that they accomplish may be explained in a natural way.

Thus while we see a man created from a rag and a hank of hair, and suddenly disappear into space in full view of our very eyes, we know that the human material and so governed by established natural laws that it is impossible for her to vanish in this way. Yet, where does she go and how is the illusion produced? That is the question, to solve the mystery of which students will go nightly to the performance of the Pull Bros, and return more mystified than ever, and are compelled to confess themselves beaten and acknowledge the presence of masters.

This is the highest and most reliable mystery attraction extant. Don't miss it. Prices 35c and $1.

DOES YOUR SOIL NEED LIM?

Best Way to Find Out is to Make Test by Means of Glass.

Lime, considered as the source of the element calcium, is one of the most absolutely essential plant foods. As such it is required in only small amounts, and it is probable that nearly all soils contain enough to satisfy the direct needs of the plant, save a criterion at the Fawcett university, Indiana, agricultural experiment station. The one best way to find whether or not the soil needs lime is to try it and see, and the place to try it is on the clover crop. A good plan is to apply ground limestone at the rate of two tons per acre and narrow in before sowing wheat, and in the spring see whether the clover is more luxuriant than the other. The clover may fall because of shortage of plant food or bad physical condition of the soil even on the lined land, so it is best to use a light application of manure in connection with the lime.

MOTHER BEANS AT VERNON'S REPAIRING STATION.

Repair shop above clover grown on lined soil, smaller clover grown on unlined ground.

Men with the time on a part of the lined strip. In case there is a stand of clover on both lined and unlined land, the two areas should be harvested and weighed separately to determine whether or not the lime has made sufficient gain to justify the cost. Advice from blue litmus paper red, and this test has been recommended for soil acidity, but we do not regard it as entirely satisfactory. However, for the information of those who may wish to try it, we give the following directions: Place a strip of blue litmus paper between two wider strips of filter paper, break open a moist clod, place one end of the strip of paper in the fracture and press the clod firmly together. In about ten minutes remove the litmus paper and pin it up to dry by the end which was left out of the soil. A change to pink or red which takes after the test of five minutes indicates acid. Do not handle the end of the paper used for testing or allow anything to touch it. Repeat the test with different samples, and if doubtful test the subsoil, which is generally more acid than the surface soil. Blue litmus paper and litmus paper can be bought at any drug store.

Fishing for Coal in Water of Long Island Sound is Profitable

Sound is Profitable

Million Tons of Black Diamonds Reported Lying Near the Port of New York

Recently it has been asserted by specialists in coal transportation that at least 1,000,000 tons of coal is lying under water in Long Island Sound, near the port of New York, dropped during many years in unloading barges or accidentally from the sides of ships, and in transferring the coal to ships. It is pointed out that many share fishermen in some of the eastern states who can handle the oyster tongs with skill have for years anchored their boats near a local wharf and "tonged" from the water some of the dropped coal. The process seems to be slow, but these fishermen say it pays them to search thus for the coal. With less skillful methods it would pay better, and it is expected that salvage on a larger scale will soon be started by some big company or companies. The loss of coal in this way is a loss of not only money, but also of the coal itself, by evaporation, but a million more tons of coal is a great help to the present supply—Popular Magazine.

George Langley, minister of municipal affairs for Saskatchewan, no fewer than 3,600 elevators in the three provinces referred to, from forty to sixty feet high, and capable of storing from 20,000 to 30,000 bushels each on the average, a few reaching to twice the greatest enumerated capacity. In other words upwards of 100,000,000 bushels of wheat can thus be stored at one time. By the terms of the Canada Grain Act, the owners of the elevators, mostly private individuals or incorporated companies, are compelled to accept all grain offered by farmers, unless wet or unstoreable with safety, hence the general and common use of the system. The elevators are all licensed by, and are under the supervision of the Board of Grain Commissioners of Canada.
